I have a feeling I am not yet good at this language. I am looking for some resource, which explains what is a class, what constructor can do, etc. I don't need something from multiple perspectives - C++ is pretty easy for someone used to another language. I just want to be able to speak C++ in the interview. A: C++ Programming: A Step-by-Step Guide, will do the job. A: You could try C++ Primer 5th Edition. A: The C++ reference is your friend. Although C++ is an object-oriented language, some members of the committee wanted to leave c/c++ in the past, when they invented C++. Therefore, the standard is a bit awkward, and most standard-library classes do not have constructors. Instead, they have a default constructor which does nothing. Caseloads and issues: moving beyond staff shortages. We argue that the measurement of service provision must move beyond staff indicators such as caseloads. As in most health services, caseload numbers are central to planning and management decisions. However, they provide an incomplete picture of service provision and may hide important service problems. The case of the Royal Free Hospital Trust is used to demonstrate that routine documentation of caseload can make problems in planning and managing medical services invisible. In the UK, the Royal Free Hospital Trust (RFHT) is responsible for providing acute medical services for a population of 350,000 people. It is unusual in that it has become a major provider of out-patient care and has recently extended its patient listing to include young people. The RFHT was the first medical service to develop and publish its annual cas
