In the middle of a movie shoot, the crew turns into a bunch of deadly characters with a mission in their hand. Anjali SharmaQ: Minimum margin/padding for OS X app Is there a definitive size for a minimum margin/padding to use in an OS X app? I'm not talking about mandatory padding, but just padding that is necessary to obtain a pleasing look. A: The rule of thumb is twice the width of the text plus about 4-8 pixels, but there's no hard and fast rules for this, especially for apps designed for the Mac (which are more about finesse than rules). A: Never do a quick check of the minimums, since there's a lot of variability in them between Apps, especially when new versions change them. Instead, check the minimums on each system (since different systems/resolutions mean different sizes). You can do this by accessing System Preferences > General > Accessibility > Display, and then clicking the Display tab. Q: UNION ALL for numbers and Null/Empty I have a table in SQL Server 2008, with a column named CompanyNo. It has a range of numbers, like xxxxx-xxxx-xxxx-xxxx There are a bunch of records with null/empty values: companyno 13797 9999 80370 But when I use the following: select max(companyNo) as companyno union all select min(nullif(companyNo,'')) from dwgdata I get a row for each null value: companyno 13797 9999 13797 Is there a way to do a count of the null values or anything like that? A: You cannot count null values. But you can use a case statement to count the non-null values SELECT max(case when companyNo is not null then companyNo end) as companyno from dwgdata new method, you can call streamCpy.next() a number of times to download the data. Because you are not reading data with readLine(), you don't need to call streamCpy.readLine() either. The other way to handle the input is to read the data from the user and create a new FileInputStream at the same time. Then you can call streamCpy 595f342e71
