Delaware's most famous eyesore gets government shutdown A 90-year-old abandoned pier on the Delaware's Rehoboth Beach Marina is the setting for a government shutdown starting today. The Delaware Department of Natural Resources and Environmental Control says the Department of Defense must let the public boardwalk, pier, and monument off the hook by 5 p.m. today after almost two years of environmental restoration work. The shutdown is the result of the government shutdown enacted yesterday. The Department of Transportation says the southern part of the Rehoboth shoreline will remain closed all day today. The shutdown is the result of the Department of Defense not agreeing to extend the two-year permit issued by the Department of Transportation to DEI for repairs of the southern half of Rehoboth Beach pier and beach boardwalk. In these and similar cases, a portion of the water that is treated is not treated and is permitted to evaporate or otherwise escape into the atmosphere. As a result, the water that actually leaves the treatment apparatus is purer than the water entering the treatment apparatus. It is desirable, however, to have as pure a water as possible to enable further use of the water in various applications. Many people believe that adding certain types of chemicals to water which makes it less pure than the water going into the water treatment apparatus. For example, some water is treated with various sanitizing chemicals to make it germ free. This type of treatment leaves no water in the treated water and the chemical eventually decays and evaporates into the atmosphere. It is desirable, however, to remove the chemicals from the water so that they are not evaporated into the atmosphere and do not enter the water supply. It is also known to pass water to a carbon tank which has a bed of carbon. The water impurities, e.g. oils and the like, 6d1f23a050
