I do work on both platforms: I work mostly on my iPhone but do a lot of work on my 15-inch Macbook Pro. It's nice that I have both tools at my fingertips and I feel like it's a good combo. With Lightroom, you essentially brand yourself by the name you choose. You can use your name and use one of the user interfaces if you want. You can also create your own presets based on your style. No matter whether you are a beginner or an expert, this elegant software will make you a better photographer. You can easily convert RAW images to JPEGs and vice versa. You can also import and open RAW images into Lightroom. You can batch edit multiple photos and then use the tools to adjust the retouching options. Not only RAW images but also JPEG and PSD images can be batch edited. Lightroom 5 also includes an easy way to copy images as well as a new and intuitive UI responsive to its version of Apple's technology. What's the difference between working in PSE and Photoshop, even if you have these programs? It's all about what "Photoshop", as it's known to the world of graphic design, can do. In short, Photoshop provides a host of tools for image editing, including layer manipulation and the ability to adjust color and image formats. It also offers a variety of 3D effects, and several tools for image retouching.
